Excerpt: .and the mill is entitled to damages measured by the excess of the contract price above what the flour could be sold for in the market on the dealer s rejection of it. And this item of damages would be propcrly charged against the dealer on a settlement of account between the parties. On the other hand, if the dealer is able to substantiate his claim that the $9 flour was below the contract quality that justifies his rejection of the shipment, and the mill must bear its loss resulting from its own breach of contract and a declining market. Since I am not advised of suilicient facts to be able to determine whether the $9 flour shipped was up to the quality bargained for, I-am not able to give an opinion as to which one of the parties is in the right in...
