The public walks are admirable, and are three in number, --the Alameda, the Plaza de la Constitucion (formerly the Plaza de San Antonio), and the Plaza de Mina. The former of these is the most recherche, and by far the most agreeable, as its situation near the sea-shore commanding a full view of that ever-moving picture, the bay, with its shipping, and the town of Puerto de Santa Maria on the opposite side, renders it gay and animated in the extreme; and the breezes wafted from the ocean temper the climate so delightfully, that, even in the most intensely hot weather, the refreshment of cool air is to be found there. The Alameda is divided into an upper and lower walk, having stone benches and narrow...
